DETAILED ACTION

The amendment filed on February 26, 2004 have been received and entered into the application.

The indicated allowability of claim 31 (originally claim 2) is withdrawn in view of the newly discovered reference(s) to Drug Launches, (6 June 1988). Rejections based on the newly cited reference(s) follow.

Applicants' election without traverse of claims drawn to a method of treating a disorder of the pilosebaceous apparatus of a mammal, comprising administering an insulin sensitivity increasing substance (i.e. biguanide), classified in class 514, subclass 635 is being examined. Accordingly, claims 9-12 and 20-30 are withdrawn from consideration.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 31- 37 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Drug Launches (6 June 1988).

Art Unit: 1617

Drug Launches teaches chlorhexidine (biguanide compound) is commercially available in a liquid formulation of 150ml, for the stimulation of hair growth and prevention of hair loss.

The prior does not expressly teach the administering to the mammal (human) and the active agent to reach an affected area of pilosebaceous apparatus.

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to employ chlorohexidine formulation taught by Drug Launches in mammal for the treatment of alopecia because chlorohexidine formulation is commercially available for the stimulation of hair growth. One would have been motivated to employ the chlorohexidine formulation for the treatment of alopecia in order to achieve the therapeutic benefit of stimulation of hair growth in a mammal having alopecia condition. Moreover, the active agent (biguanide compound) taught by Drug Launches obviously reaches an affected area of a pilosebaceous apparatus upon administration to effectively stimulate the hair growth as taught by Drug Launches. Absent any evidence to contrary, there would have been a reasonable expectation of success in treating alopecia by preventing hair loss in mammal with easy access commercially available product taught by Drug Launches. The pharmaceutical formulations, e.g., topical, oral are all deemed obvious since they are all within the knowledge of the skilled pharmacologist and represent conventional formulations.

Claims 38-44 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Drug Launches as applied to claims 31-37 above, and further in view of Lurie (U.S.Patent No. 6,075,005).

Art Unit: 1617

The teachings of Drug Launches as applied as before.

Drug Launches does not teach the combination of chlorohexidine composition with STI, ARB or the activity-enhancing agent.

Laurie teaches anti-androgenic agents such as finasteride, spironolactone, flutamide or RU 58841 is useful for the treatment of hair growth or alopecia. (abstract).

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to combine STI, ARB with biguanide compound taught by Drug Launch because all the components are well known individually for treating alopecia. It would be expected that the combination of components would treat alopecia conditions involving hair loss as well. The motivation for combining the components flows from their individually known common utility (see In re Kerkhoven, 205 USPQ 1069(CCPA 1980)). Thus, the claims fail to patentably distinguish over the state of the art as represented by the cited references.

For these reasons the claimed subject matter is deemed to fail to patentably distinguish over the state of the art as represented by the cited references. The claims are therefore properly rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103.

None of the claims are allowed.

Any rejection of record not addressed herein is withdrawn.
